Just Like Honey

Author's Note:

Obviously, this work is rated Mature for a reason.

The reason being: It will contain references to and acts of drug, substance, and sexual abuse. Minor instances of violence and depictions of mental illness and/or self-harm as well. If you are uncomfortable with any of those, please take them into consideration before reading any further. Most chapters are short, but that doesn't exempt the warning.

Another note: Pennywise does not and will not exist in this work. Most references to the novel and 2017/2019 movies are loose. None of the Losers know each other in the ways that they do in the canon verse.

It's Wednesday, Bill Denbrough thought. Fucking Wednesday.

More specifically, it's Wednesday, the fifth of October, and he hates it. The hatred burns through him as it burns through the cursed date on the calendar—with a passion. And it makes him sick.

So, he ignored it.

He ignored it until he realized that the rent on his apartment is due, the front-right tire on the station wagon is going flat, and a person—a boy—is waiting on the curb outside of the shop at eight in the morning.

Author's Note:

As I said, most chapters will be short . . .

Which means more to come. Nevertheless, let me know how you feel in the comments!
